

TAER

Taer was born in a small town in Forsen not far from Trulk. He lived with his parents until their death. At age 9, he was sent to a local monastery of cloistored clerics. He remained in the monastery for 9 years learning to become a friar. He rose to third level over this period. During this time he became intimately aquinted with the tales of adventures in the large monastery library. Despite the fact that he had grown rather large under the feeding habits the friars aquainted him with, he decided to serve his god in battle rather than in silent worship. To allow himself to do so, he decided to become a paladin. One evening, while all the other friars were asleep he slipped out of his room and silently left the monastery. For a year, he wandered the surrounding countryside in training in an effort to reduce his portly size. He managed to do so, to a point. It was found that, because of his great love of food, he would often sleepwalk on "food raids" to sate his voracious appetite. He recently found a group of adventurers who left home to please their wandering desire in a bar called "The Green Rooster Feather" in the town of Drune. He always carries his collection of four books with him and immediately gets any book he can about adventurers and adventuring.
